

Staying Connected with Campus Services

Recognizing 50 Years of Work at Dartmouth!

Since he was very young, FO&M's Johnny Johnson has had a presence on campus. While his father worked in facilities from 1958 to 1976, Johnny's mother brought him to campus before school to play while she did laundry for some of the professors. In 1971 Johnny began his own career, following in his father's footsteps in the paint shop. He worked there full-time until July 1989 during which time he saw several of Dartmouth's firsts – the first women accepted as students in 1972 and initial construction of the Hood Museum of Art which opened in 1985. It was exciting, Johnny said, to see the Hood renovated in 2019.

Between 1989 and 1992, Johnny continued to paint part-time at Dartmouth, returning during summer months and over holiday breaks, and in 1992, he returned to the regular, full-time position in which he continues to work today. In 1995, Johnny started producing Dartmouth signs which, he says, have changed greatly with the adage of technology. While he took several courses to learn ADA lettering and working with vinyl, Johnny learned how to use computers on his own. He's enjoyed the challenge of that and has made thousands of signs, each a bit different from the others. He knows Dartmouth's buildings well, having walked in the hallways, attics, basements, and tunnels of every College building except the Moosilauke Ravine Lodge. He laughed while saying, "I've already been in all 282 rooms of the new Energy & Computer Science Institute, and that just opened in March."

One of Johnny's favorite campus locations is Tuck, and one of his biggest fans is Tuck's Events and Facilities Director Shelley Wirasnik. She wrote, "Johnny Johnson is a megastar, he is the sign master of all times! I have worked very closely with Johnny for many years and have always enjoyed my interactions with him, he is very kind and personable. Johnny is my first go-to for anything signage, we have developed wayfinding signage, emergency signage, name signage, art signage, and just about every other kind of signage you could think of for Tuck! He knows the importance of customer service, and shows that he cares! I really appreciate his expertise and am grateful for all the time he has dedicated to Tuck! Thank you, Johnny!"

Check out the 50th annual PowWow on the Green Saturday. It's quite a show!
